

How often elites held power in two of the four domains

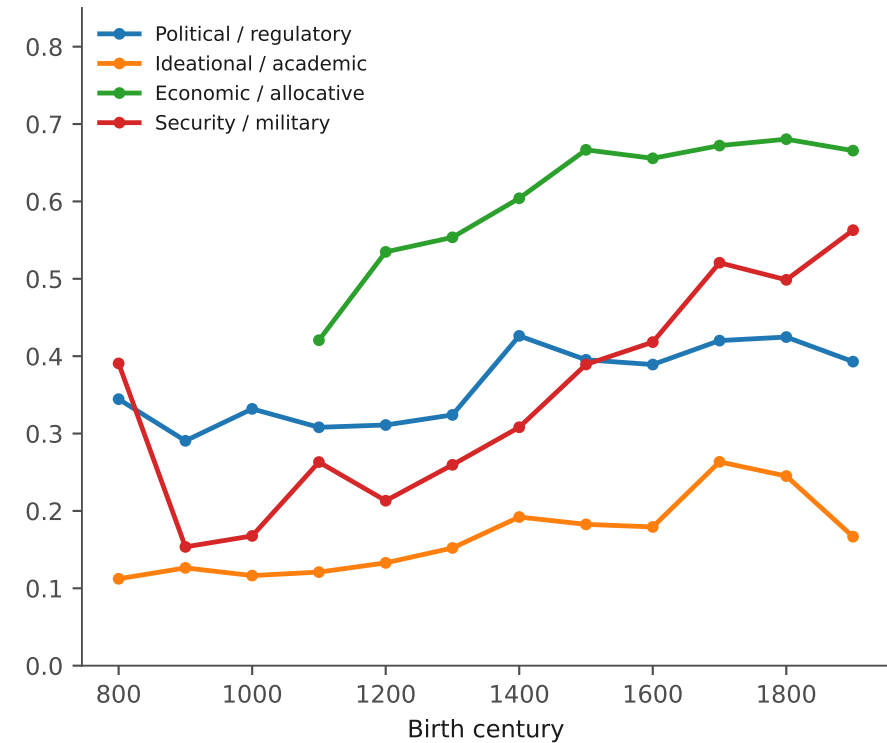

Crossing and consolidation

Crossing rate by world region

Reach out of each domain

Left: the share of classified elites crossing a domain boundary rises to a peak in the 1700s and falls afterwards, while roughly half of all two-sector elites in every century combine sectors inside one domain. Right: economic and security elites are the most likely to hold a second domain, ideational elites the least. Modern levels are pulled down by shorter biographies, so read the ordering across domains ahead of the level.
