

Four positions in the network of elite power

Sectors grouped by the company they keep

The association matrix reordered by block

Two sectors occupy the same position when they combine with the same partners, whether or not they combine with each other. Distance is one minus the correlation between their rows of the association matrix, computed with the two sectors' own cells left out; linkage is average. Four blocks are used for comparability with the four-domain scheme: the silhouette curve is close to flat across two to six blocks (0.29 to 0.34), so the number is a choice and not a finding.
